THE WORKPLACE

Emergency medicine is delivered at several sites across the Fredericton region but managed as a singular department. This campus model includes the emergency departments at the Dr. Everett Chalmers Regional Hospital (DECRH) and the Oromocto Public Hospital as well as the Fredericton Urgent Treatment Centre.

The DECRH site serves as the regional Trauma Center, offering most specialty and subspecialty services except for cardiac and neurosurgery cases. The Emergency Department is well-supported with in house mental health nurses, psychiatry services, 24/7 respiratory therapists, and onsite critical care specialists and obstetricians. Annual visits average 43,500 patients per year with a variety of high to low acuity cases, reflecting the diverse medical needs of the community.

The Oromocto Public Hospital is a smaller facility with 45 beds which offers primary care services, emergency medicine, and outpatient clinics. The Emergency Department sees a volume of approximately 20,000 patients per year, ranging from moderately high to low acuity cases.

The Fredericton Urgent Treatment Center is the newest addition, equipped with various diagnostic and treatment capabilities to cater to lower acuity non-life-threatening conditions and minor procedures.

PHYSICIAN ROTATION

Physicians are expected to rotate through each site during their practice, ensuring a diverse experience and coverage across all locations.
